Questions with our Fiji nationals

Mrs. Unaisi Vukica – Assistant Language Teacher (ALT)

Working as an ALT teacher includes academic work and practical experience. It also bears a weight of responsibility as you are as much an ambassador for your country as you are a teacher.

How did you come to Japan to work as an Assistant Language Teacher?

I came as a JET (Japan Exchange Teaching) Program ALT on 31 July 2011. That year 4 countries in the South Pacific (Fiji,Tonga,Samoa,Palau) were included in this program. Successful applicants went through intense interview procedures, and I was quite fortunate to be chosen and be part of this prestigious program I served at Naha Nishi Senior High School in Okinawa for 4 years. When my contract ended on 31 July 2015, I moved to Saitama joining a private ALT company until today. This is the 10th year of living and working in Japan together with my family.

How different is your experience teaching Japanese children to teaching in Fiji?

While in Japan I had experienced teaching in all levels from High School, Junior High and Elementary schools. This enabled me to be part of an education system very different than that of Fiji. Teaching back home was not an easy ride for the many struggles I had to endure such as limitation of resources especially in rural schools, student - teacher ratio and students' behavior in order to deliver a great lesson Despite of all those I continue to serve the community in love. On the other hand, in Japan no matter where you're stationed resources are always in abundant supply, you're also fortunate to experience the latest technology teaching aids in class. The number of students in class are manageable and quite easy to handle as there are not so many problematic students. There are special teachers available to help students with special needs on a one-to-one basis. From my experience I notice that students in rural schools are well behaved and cooperative in class but vice versa in urban schools.

What are the backgrounds of the students you teach?

Currently, I teach at 3 suburban elementary schools in a nearby city to where I reside. Majority of the students live in extended families whose parents mostly work in factories and offices.

How well have you managed a class whose first language is not English?

As an ALT I participate in team teaching daily with home room teachers (HRT) or Japanese Teachers of English (JTE). Together, we create interesting programs to allow maximum and active interaction of students in a foreign language in the classroom to enhance students' motivation towards learning a foreign language and deepens the students understanding of foreign cultures.

What motivates you for teaching?

A great teacher wants to help and to play a part in shaping the person they will ultimately become. I grew up in a family of teachers who were quite instrumental to who am I today. I admired them for their devotion to this noble profession. Their great reputation on their students, my family and to the community motivated me to follow their career path. I never regretted becoming a teacher as it has put me in a position to influence my current and previous students in their decisions, behaviors, strengths, weaknesses and imagination and above all a calling of being part of shaping the next generations.

What are the challenges you face and how have you cope with them?

Coming to a new country indeed have its ups and downs. The two most challenges I face are the language barrier and the gaijin complex syndrome. I was able to overcome these challenges by learning as much as I can about Japanese culture and even be okay with the fact that I will always be viewed as an outsider in Japan, attending festivals and interact with local people, take online classes, and buy resources to learn Japanese and create good relationships within my locality and working places. These has led to bridge the cultural gap and create mutual understanding within the society. 10 years in a country we call our second home away from home that has greatly broaden our horizon to the outside world. We have come to appreciate the uniqueness of Japanese culture and the thoughtfulness and considerate gestures of the people, how beautifully and efficiently everything works and how people take great pride of their surroundings. We hope you have a chance to experience this during your trip to Japan!

Mr. Mohammed Jannif (Matthew) - Professional Tennis Coach

Being a competent professional tennis coach requires skills and abilities. Still, it also bears a weight of responsibility as you are as much an ambassador for your country as you are a tennis coach.

What brought you to coach tennis in Japan? Prior to arriving in Japan, at the Hilton Tokyo, I was transferred from Hilton Guam Resort & Spa where I served as director of tennis. Back then, I worked for (PBI - Peter Burwash International), an American tennis management company regarded/ranked as world's #1. PBI provided top ranked tennis professionals to 5-star hotels and resorts all over the world. Prior to arriving in Japan, I worked in Fiji (Denarau Golf & Racquet Club), Four Seasons Hotel Singapore, Grand Hyatt, Seoul, Korea, The Malliouhana Resort in Anguilla, The Caribbean Islands, Marriott's Rancho Las Palmas, Palm Springs, California, The Inn & Tennis Club at Manitou, Toronto, Canada, Hilton Guam Resort & Spa, Guam and at the Hilton, Tokyo, Japan.

How is coaching tennis in Japan different to Fiji? Well though there are same rules and regulations in tennis wherever we go. There is a vast difference between Fiji and Japan. Japan tennis is much more structured compared to Fiji. In Japan tennis is an industry. There is tennis equipment, clothing, balls, machineries that are used in our industry which are manufactured here so there is a huge emphasis in the philosophy and the actual business aspect of it. Also, there is junior, senior high schools to college tennis so tennis is much more structured here. Also, from regular to top professional level tournaments are held within the country as well. So, in a way there is no comparison between these two countries.

How well have you managed a team whose first language is not English? Yes, this wasn't and will never be easy for a foreigner to master. Nonetheless, by first understanding how to speak their language then getting to know their culture and lifestyle. I was fortunate since I had a huge interest in this culture and my wife who's a Japanese assisted me a lot to settle in. I did travel to Japan as a tennis player when I was 18 years old. I was fascinated about Japan, so I did try to understand their culture well before I arrived in mid-December of 2002 in Tokyo. By learning their language and culture quite quickly, I was able to head a tennis club where I was the head coach of a 29-court tennis facility in Tokyo. I had a team of 40+ staff with over 2000 students and over 150 programs a week.

What would your advice be to upcoming Fijian tennis players or coaches planning to come to Japan to be aware of? Well first, try to understand the difference between an amateur and a professional in every aspect of your life and not just tennis. One must have a certain level of attitude and determination to succeed as well. As for me, I already traveled to Japan when I was young, then my work experiences over the world, traveling and other educational experiences really helped me find success quite quickly in Japan.

What are the challenges you face coaching tennis in Japan and how did you overcome them? My biggest challenge is same as all foreign professional coaches face here which is the culture and lack of English-speaking players. Since tennis is not originally a Japanese sport, a lot of educational materials are supposed to be learnt through English since there are a lot of nuances. Most Japanese players are unable to understand what tennis is really about since they are unable to separate their daily life culture with tennis as a sport.

Do you see future opportunities for Fijian tennis players or coaches in Japan? I always believed to this day that with determination nothing is really impossible. Everything is possible if you desire and work hard for it. Japan is quite different from Fiji where the demand of work production and work ethics are their life pillars. So, if one is willing to understand that I am sure there would certainly be lots of opportunities here in Japan. I would suggest that one stays away from Tokyo since life is quite demanding and living standard is quite high, so I would recommend other places preferably south of Japan since the weather down south are more bearable than the north. I would be willing to work and develop players and coaches in Fiji by working with Fiji Tennis Association and Ministry of Sports in Fiji & Japan since my work entails in coaching elite players and developing players who aspire to become tennis coach.

Tennis Life in Japan

Mr. Dinesh Chand - Professional Golfer

Being a competent professional golfer requires skills and abilities. Still, it also bears a weight of responsibility as you are as much an ambassador for your country as you are a professional golfer.

What brought you to play golf in Japan?

It was a dream to come to Japan. Meeting a Japanese businessman while playing golf in Nadi. I was asked what my dream and it was only golf. Following the footsteps of Vijay Singh.

How is playing golf in Japan different to Fiji?

Playing golf in Japan was very difficult at first. You have to be focused, physically, mentally, playing in tournaments in Japan tour was always at very high level. Time speaks all the difference then and now. I guess any sports is different these days.

How well have you managed a team whose first language is not English?

I did all my training and practice in Nagano prefecture for 4 years, based at SUNNY COUNTRY CLUB where I studied speaking Japanese language. It was very difficult to learn but it was very interesting at the same time. I guess I can speak better Japanese than speaking English now (hahaha).

What would your advice be to upcoming Fijian golf players planning to come to Japan to be aware of?

My advice to upcoming golfer in Fiji, if you want to come to Japan, learn the language first. We Fijian are very strong physically. Appreciate all the time while practicing and playing. Everything is on time here where else we are very relaxed in Fiji time.

What are the challenges you face playing golf in Japan and how did you overcome them?

The challenges in Japan playing professional golf tournaments are not that difficult. Golf is not a team event. Its individual. You have to build your own team, coach, trainer, manager, caddy, etc.

Do you see future opportunities for Fijian golf players in Japan?

Oh yes for sure. Its only matter of time and chance as I said before we are very strong physical means hard work will always pay. Trust and commitment would be the best factor.

The only way to help Fijian golfer to come to Japan is sponsorship. Cost of living is high, and time is quick. I love to help and give any support. I am very confident to rise a golfing star out of our beautiful islands.
